

Module 6: Writing a Research Paper
Topic 3 Content: Transitions Between Paragraphs

Introduction

Using Keywords
From Previous Paragraphs

“ ”

Using Ideas
From Previous
Paragraphs

In this interactivity, click the titles to learn more about creating transitions between paragraphs in a research paper using one of two methods: borrowing keywords or borrowing ideas from the preceding paragraph. Click Continue to begin.

Module 6: Writing a Research Paper

Topic 3 Content: Transitions Between Paragraphs

Using Keywords From Previous Paragraphs

Using Keywords From Previous Paragraphs

You can create transitions between paragraphs by pulling keywords or phrases from the previous paragraph and reusing them in the beginning of the following paragraph. In the example below, notice the repetition of the word "reality."

Example:

... So, as August comes to an end, children begin to face a harsh reality.

And what is that reality? It is the fact that a long year of school will soon begin, and this event is unavoidable. . . .

Return

You can create transitions between paragraphs by pulling keywords or phrases from the previous paragraph and reusing them in the beginning of the following paragraph. In the example below, notice the repetition of the word "reality."

Example:

... So, as August comes to an end, children begin to face a harsh reality.

And what is that reality? It is the fact that a long year of school will soon begin, and this event is unavoidable. . . .

Module 6: Writing a Research Paper

Topic 3 Content: Transitions Between Paragraphs

Using Ideas From Previous Paragraphs

You can create transitions between paragraphs by identifying main ideas from the previous paragraph and reusing them in the beginning of the following paragraph. In the example below, notice the repeated concept of freedom introduced in the previous paragraph.

Example:

... Finally teenagers could drive their own cars. They rejoiced in the ability to go wherever they pleased, whenever they pleased.

Their newfound freedom, however, turned out to be less fulfilling than they expected. . . .

Return

Using Ideas From Previous Paragraphs

You can create transitions between paragraphs by identifying main ideas from the previous paragraph and reusing them in the beginning of the following paragraph. In the example below, notice the repeated concept of freedom introduced in the previous paragraph.

Example:

... Finally teenagers could drive their own cars. They rejoiced in the ability to go wherever they pleased, whenever they pleased.

Their newfound freedom, however, turned out to be less fulfilling than they expected. . . .